

Faculty Council (Fakultätsrat)

The Faculty Council is the highest body of the Faculty, which is a basic unit within the organization of academic self-government.

The Faculty Council has the following important tasks, among others:

- Decisions on fundamental matters of teaching, study and research at the Faculty
- Decisions about the Faculty's statutes
- Election and deselection of the dean and the vice-deans
- Decisions on the teaching programs
- Resolutions on the teaching report of the faculty and on the reports on the evaluation of teaching as well as the study and examination regulations
- Decisions on appointment proposals and decisions on habilitations
- Decisions on the faculty's equal opportunity concept
- Decisions on all issues concerning the faculty as a whole
- Election of members for all other boards and commissions of the faculty

Each of the four status groups (professors, research staff, administrative staff and students) has its representatives in the faculty council. The representatives are being elected within the status group. All members of the status groups are invited

- to candidate as a member of the faculty council and
- to vote about the representatives of the status groups.

According to the faculty statute the faculty council has 15 members, each member has a substitute. The structure of the members of the faculty council is as follows:

- 8 professors
- 2 representatives of the research staff (WMA)
- 2 representatives of the administrative staff (MTV)
- 3 student representatives

Elections for all faculty councils of RUB take place every three years in June. They are centrally monitored by the election's office of the Rectorate. The last regular elections took place in June 2020, the next regular elections will take place in June 2023.

Since the Faculty of Computer Science has not existed in June 2020, the elections for the first faculty council took place after the foundation of the faculty (1.10.2021) in November 2021. Since these elections were extraordinary, the members of the new faculty council will be elected in June 2023 (13. and 14. June).

The meetings of the Faculty Council take place 3-4 times each semester.

The members of the current Faculty Council are listed on the following page.
